Built From a Problem Seen in the Real World

KLYVOREK began with a simple observation.

While serving as a police sergeant with a metro Atlanta, Georgia, law enforcement agency, Sergeant Edward Brown regularly reviewed reports written by officers and dispatchers. Too often, important details were missing. Grammar was inconsistent. Narratives were unclear. In some cases, the quality of the documentation simply did not reflect the professionalism of the people doing the work.

That mattered.

A police report is more than paperwork. It is a permanent legal document that may later be reviewed by prosecutors, attorneys, judges, juries, and the public. What is left out, or poorly explained, can create unnecessary questions and potential liability.

Some personnel turned to general-purpose AI tools such as ChatGPT and Microsoft Copilot for help. But that raised another concern: sensitive law enforcement information should not be entered into AI platforms that the agency has not approved for handling Criminal Justice Information (CJI).

Brown began looking for a better solution.

He reviewed several report-writing platforms but repeatedly encountered the same problems: some were too complicated, others too expensive, and others were designed broadly for public safety rather than specifically for the everyday documentation needs of law enforcement.

So, he decided to build something different.

Brown partnered with Towhidul, an artificial intelligence and web development company with more than 10 years of experience. Together, the team created KLYVOREK around three principles:

Secure by Design. Simple to Use. Affordable to Deploy.

KLYVOREK helps law enforcement personnel turn officer-provided facts into clear incident reports, organized investigative documentation, and structured arrest and search warrant drafts, all while keeping the law enforcement professional in control.

KLYVOREK wasn't created because law enforcement needed more technology.

It was created because law enforcement needed technology that better understood the work they do.

Once a user has been informed that there are missing items in a warrant, how do they correct it?

How is this done if police agencies ask? Yes — Department-tier subscribers have access to our API integration suite, which supports connections to most major RMS platforms. Our integration team will work with your IT department to establish a secure data pipeline.

KLYVOREK uses artificial intelligence to help users organize and structure the information they provide.

KLYVOREK is designed around a fundamental principle:

The user provides the facts. AI assists with structure. The law enforcement professional controls and approves the final document.

AI-generated content may contain errors, omissions, inappropriate inferences, or inaccurate language. Users must independently review and verify all AI-assisted content before relying upon, submitting, signing, swearing to, exporting, or otherwise using it.

4. Criminal Justice Information and Sensitive Data

Law enforcement agencies are responsible for determining whether information entered into KLYVOREK constitutes Criminal Justice Information (“CJI”), Criminal History Record Information (“CHRI”), personally identifiable information, protected investigative information, or other restricted data.

Use of KLYVOREK with CJI or other restricted information is permitted only when the agency has determined that the applicable KLYVOREK deployment, configuration, contractual arrangements, and agency procedures satisfy its legal, regulatory, CJIS, security, and policy requirements.

Users must not circumvent agency policies governing the handling of CJI or other sensitive information.

5. Data Isolation and Access Controls

KLYVOREK uses technical and organizational safeguards intended to limit unauthorized access to customer information.

Where applicable to the subscribed service and deployment configuration, these safeguards may include:

- Account authentication

- Tenant or customer data separation
- Security logging
- Audit trails
- Access monitoring
- Secure infrastructure

Specific security controls may vary according to deployment, subscription, agency configuration, and contractual requirements.

6. AI Model Training

Unless expressly authorized through a separate written agreement, KLYVOREK does not intentionally use agency-submitted case narratives, reports, warrant facts, or CJI to train publicly available general-purpose AI models.

Where third-party infrastructure or AI providers are used, processing is governed by applicable contractual, technical, security, and data-handling requirements.

7. Data Retention

KLYVOREK retains information only for periods reasonably necessary to:

- Provide contracted services
- Maintain security and auditability
- Meet contractual obligations
- Resolve disputes
- Comply with applicable law
- Meet agency-configured retention requirements where available

Law enforcement agencies remain responsible for determining their official records-retention requirements.

Deletion from KLYVOREK does not alter an agency's independent obligation to preserve official records, evidence, discovery material, public records, or other information required by law or agency policy.

8. Disclosure of Information

KLYVOREK does not sell law enforcement case information.

Information may be disclosed when reasonably necessary to:

- Provide contracted infrastructure or services
- Protect the security or integrity of KLYVOREK
- Investigate fraud or unauthorized access

Where legally permitted and appropriate, KLYVOREK will seek to direct requests for agency-controlled records to the relevant agency.

9. Agency Ownership and Control

Between KLYVOREK and the subscribing agency, the agency retains its rights to information submitted by its authorized users, subject to licenses reasonably necessary for KLYVOREK to provide the contracted services.

KLYVOREK does not acquire ownership of an agency's police reports, investigative facts, case information, or warrant information merely because the information is processed through the platform.

10. Security

No information system can guarantee absolute security.

KLYVOREK maintains reasonable administrative, technical, and organizational safeguards appropriate to the services provided. Agencies and users are also responsible for maintaining secure credentials, devices, networks, permissions, and internal procedures.
